New Website Gives Parents a Look at Teacher's Contracts

Cheyenne- Posted 1/5/07

Steven Sgourdos

A new website launched by the National Council on Teacher Quality says they will allow parents to view teacher contracts for the nation's 50 largest districts. The top 50 districts educate eight million children and employ nearly a half of million teachers.

The website would provide parents access to information highlighting teacher working conditions. According to USA today many teacher unions oppose the website's launch citing the possibility for misinterpreted data as the reason.

Laramie County School District 1 has mixed feelings on the new website.

"Somebody that really presents unbiased information will talk about both sides of the issues. Saying this is what the data is really showing...these are the pros...these are the cons....it gives me a little cause for concern when it's all one or the other," says John Little of Laramie County School District 1. "Then it makes me wonder if there is another interest behind it."
