

January 27, 2011

Contact: Sarah Brody
Phone 202.393.0020 ext. 110
sbrody@nctq.org

NEW REPORT MAPS OUT NEXT STEPS FOR CONNECTICUT ON TEACHER POLICIES IN NEED OF REFORM

Connecticut received a D+ in 2009 from the National Council on Teacher Quality with some progress made in the past year; 2010 Blueprint for Change shows that Connecticut has much work to do to ensure that students have effective teachers

January 27, 2011 (Washington, DC) — The National Council on Teacher Quality today released its fourth annual State Teacher Policy Yearbook, reviewing state laws, rules and regulations that govern the teaching profession. The 2010 edition differs from earlier versions, providing a Blueprint for Change to help state policymakers prioritize among the many areas of teacher policy in need of reform.

Each state report identifies the policy areas most in need of critical attention, as well as "low-hanging fruit," policies that can be addressed in relatively short order. The Blueprint for Change is based on an updated-for-2010 review and analysis of Connecticut's teacher policies. The state received an overall grade of D+ in 2009, and this year's Yearbook finds that Connecticut has made some progress on teacher quality goals over the past year, including new teacher evaluation requirements that include evidence of student learning in teacher evaluations.

The Blueprint for Change is designed as a companion to the 2009 State Teacher Policy Yearbook, NCTQ's most recent comprehensive report on teacher policies. NCTQ President Kate Walsh said, "Our goal with this year's Yearbook is not just to provide analyses of where states are, but to give state policymakers a tool for getting started on the road to reform. To do this, we made this year's Yearbook a compilation of where states were last year, the progress they've made, and the areas in which they need to continue to work toward reform."

Among the findings for Connecticut:

Critical Attention Areas -- Some of Connecticut's highest priorities include:

- Connecting teacher evaluation, tenure and dismissal to classroom effectiveness;

- Ensuring that elementary teacher candidates are well prepared to teach math and that teacher preparation programs are held accountable for the quality of the teachers they produce;
- Ensuring that teachers have adequate content knowledge by improving testing requirements; and
- Expanding the teacher pipeline by allowing alternate route candidates to teach all subjects and grades as well as allowing diverse providers of alternate route programs.

Low-Hanging Fruit – Examples of policy areas for Connecticut where a small adjustment would result in significantly stronger policy:

- Ensuring that out-of-state teachers meet Connecticut's testing requirements
- Informing the public about teacher preparation program quality.

The Blueprint for Change also identifies performance management, pension reform, and certification of special education teachers as longer term systemic issues that Connecticut needs to keep in mind as it works on improving its teacher policies.

Walsh continued: "We are encouraged by the significant changes we saw in a number of states during the past year, largely spurred by the Race to the Top competition, but states still have much work to do to ensure that every student is taught by an effective teacher."

The Blueprint for Change in Connecticut, which includes national comparisons, is immediately available for free download at: www.nctq.org/stpy. For questions about the report, please contact Sarah Brody at (202) 393-0020 or sbrody@nctq.org.

Funding

The State Teacher Policy Yearbook was funded by private foundations across the United States, including the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, Carnegie Corporation of New York, Gleason Family Foundation, The George Gund Foundation and The Joyce Foundation.

NCTQ accepts no funding from the federal government.

About NCTQ

The National Council of Teacher Quality —comprised of reform-minded Democrats, Republicans, and Independents— is a non-partisan research and policy group committed to restructuring the teaching profession, led by the belief that all children deserve effective teachers. More information about NCTQ, including a list of the Board of Directors and Advisory Board, can be found on the NCTQ website, www.nctq.org.