OHIO GETS DISMAL MARKS FOR TEACHER POLICIES IN NEW REPORT-- LABELED 'LANGUISHING'

–Today the National Council on Teacher Quality released a 50-state encyclopedia on states' teacher policies, concluding that many Ohio's policies are counterproductive to the nation's teacher quality goals–

Washington, DC -- The State Teacher Policy Yearbook is the first project of its kind to provide a 360-degree detailed analysis of how states are hurting or helping teacher quality--and what they can do to fix broken and anachronistic policies.

Ohio ranks at the very bottom of states with no grade higher than "D" in any of the six areas NCTQ assessed, ranging from teacher admissions standards, licensure to compensation reform.

"Ohio's policies, like all states', are in need of an overhaul," said Kate Walsh, president of NCTQ. "It's time to exchange the gas-guzzling clunker for a hybrid."

Among the findings:

- Ohio neglects the preparation of special education teachers, failing to ensure that these teachers are prepared to teach students with disabilities.
- State licensing rules make it very difficult for knowledgeable, qualified individuals to switch careers to go into teaching without burdensome coursework demands.
- The state has lax oversight of its education schools; doing little to ensure the quality of students going in and teachers coming out of its programs.

Despite these bleak findings, there are some bright spots. The state stands out for its efforts to put in place a statewide assessment system to measure teacher effectiveness and link it back to their preparation program. The state is also supporting a performance pay pilot program.

NCTQ -- comprised of reform-minded Democrats, Republicans, and Independents -- advocates for reforms in a broad range of teacher policies and seeks to lend transparency and accountability to the three institutions that have the greatest impact on teacher quality: state governments, colleges of education, and teachers' unions.
